Many Farr customers possess Tree Peonies which bear more than 100 blooms. The plants offered on this page each carried five to fifteen blooms this spring.

The Best and Rarest Plants require no more room or upkeep than the Ordinary. Plant a Tree Peony this September

"People From All Around"

Visitors to our gardens and correspondents by the score say that "people from all around come to see my Tree Peonies."

You, too, can have "people from all around" come to see your Tree Peonies, for they really require less attention than roses, azaleas, phlox and other hardy kindred.

For twenty years and more we have planned to produce Tree Peonies at a price within the reach of all sincere gardeners. Now we have the plants—four- and five-year-old specimens at less than half the prices prevailing from 1914 to 1934. In fact the prices are the lowest ever.

This is a Tree Peony Year

We have the most extensive list of varieties published in America since the Foreign Plant Exclusion Act of 1918. There is nothing to be gained by waiting. Some varieties may be sold out within a few days after this offer appears.

Centuries of Sentiment Surround Tree Peonies

Tree Peonies are so named because they are hardwood and deciduous shrubs. "Shrub" Peonies might be more accurate, but back in 536 A. D. the Chinese recorded them as Tree Peonies, and they became the exclusive property of the Emperor. Japan received some in 924 A. D. and the first plants came to America in 1787.

Some American plants are more than 50 years old and bloom freely. Many Farr customers have reported a hundred blooms on one plant, less than 25 years old. In Norfolk, England, an eighty-year-old plant bears 400 blooms from 8 to 9 inches in diameter. Three-year-old plants may have 4 blooms, and six-year-olds have had 25 blooms.

Tree Peonies are Easily Cared For

Tree Peonies prefer limed soil, good drainage, sunlight with partial shade to protect the blooms, and a lee from winter winds. Feed and cultivate the plants conscientiously—and your Tree Peonies will be a source of pride and pleasure for a lifetime. Planting instructions are sent with all orders.

Tree Peonies Available for Fall, 1935

NOTE: All Tree Peonies, except full double, have golden center stamens, and all have "crepe-paper" petals. They possess a range and intensity of color found in no other hardy plant family.
